Debate of U. S. Policy Toward Russia Marked by Disorder.

NEW YORK, March 28 .- Demonstrations and hisses at the mention of Woodrow Wilson and former Sec retary of State Colby marked a public debate at Carnegie Hall last night between Senator Joseph I. Further disorder occurred when the audience, believing that a vote was to be taken at the end of the debate, was informed that, through a misunderstanding, this would not be done.

At adjournment many persons rushed upon the paltform to threaten Rabbi Joseph Silverman, who declared that such a vote would be un-American in face of the government's stand. He charged that the meeting was packed and persons in the audience were heard to say that socialistic newspapers had urged their readers to attend in masses. their readers to attend in masses. Senator King, after many interrup tions, during which the former Pres ident's name was repeatedly hisse and booed, denounced many of his hearers as being "bolsheviks" and recommended lessons in Americanism for them. The questions during the debate hinged on the statements of Senator France that Russia has gold, raw products and concessions by which she could pay for trade; that the American policy has been one of war in all dealings with Russian armies and especially in "invading" the north of Russia, at Archangel.

Senator King replied that the Russenator King replied that the Russian gold, for the most part belonging to Eumania and other countries, would not be sufficient to start even a small amount of trade, even if Americans could bring themselves to the point of taking it. A statement by Senator France that "America's waging war on Germany by invading Russia was as bad as Germany's in-Russia was as bad as Germany's invasion of Belgium" drew scathing rebuke from Senator King.

Senator France argued that the policy of the United States has been unwise, "because un-American." The news of the Russian revolt, he said. should have caused the liberty bell at Philadelphia to be rung again.

The governor also was considering the request of Solicitor Campbell of Williams and Manning both are held in the county jail at Atlanta on warrants charging murder. Williams has stoutly denied any participation in the murders of the negroes found on his farm.

for peonage. Six of the victims were brought to six of the victims were brought to light Saturday under the guidance of the negro Manning, who led the posse of searchers from spot to spot, point-ing out where they should dig. Points Out Place. Men were left at the bridge to search for the bodies of Charles Chis-holm, John Brown and "Little Bit." whom Manning had declared were drowned there. The negro pointed out the places where the men had been thrown and the dredging of the Alcovy river was started, while the remainder of the party went to the plantation of Williams. Without hesitating Manning took
